

Open A Savings Account

A savings account is one of the most secure ways to save for the future. Most bank and credit union accounts are insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, which means that even if your financial institution is in trouble, you will not lose your money. But just like a checking account, there are some things you should know. Ask these questions about your savings account:

Questions to ask about savings accounts:

- * How much money do I need to open the account?
- * How much interest does it earn?
- * Is there a minimum balance required?
- * How many withdrawals can be made per month?
- * Is there a monthly service charge?
- * Can I set up automatic transfers?
